African American writers of the Harlem Renaissance generally fall into three aesthetic categories: the folk, which emphasizes oral traditions, African American English, rural settings, and characters from lower socioeconomic levels; the bourgeois, which privileges characters from middle class backgrounds; and the proletarian, which favors overt critiques of oppression by contending that art ...

Rereading the Harlem Renaissance: Race, Class, and Gender ...
National magazines, such as Vanity Fair, heralded the advent of the "Second (Harlem) renaissance" and the revitalization of the area as evidenced by the popularity of Harlem nightclubs, restaurants, and galleries ("Harlem Renaissance" 2001:193). The Vanity Fair layout included a map of Harlem's most popular sites. The affluent individuals moving into Harlem to renovate old brownstones and "gentrify" the area, and the escalating price of real estate in this mostly lower-class area ...
